I have a PCG-512111 model and recently upgraded to Windows 7 Ultimate. I'm still able to boot up and login to my original installation with Windows Vista Ultimate, but it no longer has wireless networking. Now when I boot in to Windows 7 Ultimate, it can't seem to locate the wireless network adapter. It shows everything correctly but won't connect. System drivers are shown on my system. If I try to download the wireless network adapter driver from Sony, it tells me it's for Windows 8.1. If I download the other drivers that are compatible with Windows 7 Ultimate, they install correctly, but I still can't use the wireless network adapter. Do you have any suggestions? A: The driver is available here: At the bottom of that page you can download the driver which is either 32 or 64 bit. You need to download the correct one. Epidemiologic, risk, and clinical features of human T cell lymphotropic virus type 1 infection in Croatia. To identify the prevalence, risk factors, clinical presentation, and association with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection, human T cell lymphotropic virus type 1 (HTLV-I) infection was investigated in three different groups of women, including pregnant women, women with sexually transmitted disease (STD), and a group at a commercial sex work clinic. Samples of plasma and sera from 14,977 individuals were tested for antibodies to HTLV-I by enzyme immunoassay; HTLV-I provirus was identified by a polymerase chain reaction method in peripheral blood mononuclear cells from 8 individuals. The overall seroprevalence of HTLV-I infection was 0.3% (32/11977; 95% confidence interval, 0.2-0.4%). This prevalence is 10 times higher than the prevalence of HTLV-I infection among parenteral drug users (0.03%) in Croatia and 2 times higher than the European mean. No cases of HTLV-I-associated myelopathy/tropical spastic paraparesis were identified. HTLV-I provirus was detected in peripheral blood mononuclear cells of two patients, confirming the presence of HTLV-I infection. However, no statistically significant differences were found in demographic characteristics among infected and uninfected pregnant women. Risk factors, 570a42141b
