Olympus Has Fallen A câmara trabalha do alto para abaixar para o pequeno print invertido que toda a cena. Racing through space with a laser: faster than anything else The latest piece of liquid-fueled technology is an “electric rocket” that uses ultrasonic waves to compress a flame of hydrogen and oxygen into a stream of fire that is quickly fueled by the explosive energy of lithium-ion batteries. It’s finally up to speed. At just shy of nine meters long, it’s small enough for a person to carry. It has a top speed of more than 8,600 mph, is able to carry a human passenger, and can handle a payload of several thousand pounds. And, a little more than a year after its debut, Elon Musk, Tesla’s CEO, says his company’s upcoming Falcon Heavy rocket will be the first in history to launch a fully electric vehicle—BFR is now Musk’s nickname for the project—which will blast off to orbit. By comparison, a dozen of NASA’s most powerful rockets are worth a little over a thousand dollars each. On September 27, 2018, SpaceX’s Falcon Heavy rocket lifted off from Kennedy Space Center in Florida, carrying Musk’s Tesla Roadster into orbit. The next day, media outlets reported that the Roadster had been left orbiting the Earth “at the edge of space
