"Power Pop" is a term that gives the illusion that a power pop band can do anything. In reality, an act might have one or two sub-genres that they even fiddle with. It's like an act might be a little country band one night, then just as quickly they can be a sound-and-light show from Las Vegas. The world of The Mining Company is based on the play style of a simulation game: dig, mine, sell and exchange. Build your base, create vehicles, sell and buy machines and resources to make profits. But the earth is not a safe place, there are lots of dangerous obstacles you need to pay attention to. Crash your vehicles, or lose them in the river and fly to save the day. You are fully capable of being a superhero in your own little world. A: The highly acclaimed MinerSim game done by Team 17 is probably the closest to that you can find. The entire world is diggable and destructive, so everything you can see you can dig. The game can be purchased and downloaded free from their website. A: There's this one game, released by Playlogic in 2003 called "Miner Madness" (or at least it was part of the older version called "Miner Dash") and has many elements of the OP's requirements: Dig for stuff. Land on a planet and make money. Buying stuff that you needed, then sell it to the next player with the maximum profit. The graphics looked pretty good back then: However, it was released in 2003 and hasn't been updated since, so you'll need to play it on an oldish computer. Generic starting pitchers Who has the best rotation in the league at this point? We all know that pitchers hit in September, but most of those guys weren't so great in the season itself. I'm not talking about Cy Young worthy pitchers, but guys who will be solid contributors for their respective clubs next season (assuming their injuries aren't an issue). I'm looking for teams that are getting great contributions from their starters in the postseason. I think this year the Cardinals have the best rotation on paper at this point. If the Cards' rotation holds up their entire bullpen doesn't look great but they do have great starting pitching depth and these guys are basically league average over the course of a season. I really like the Cardinals c9d1549cdd
